As more advanced societies progress so do our laws and understanding. For a community to survive a key aspect of life is understanding the laws of the land. In today's society laws have become a little more complex than "the golden rule" and in being so our public education system should reflect this. Is it possible for legal studies in public school to continue after the golden rule is taught in 1st grade, or is this an impossibility with the caste system tribalists in our democratic governments today? It seems with so many foreigners from undeveloped nations employed in US and EU government positions and Russia/Canadian animals in the white house, that keeping an educated public has become a far fetched fantasy. With the curriculum of 1st to 12th grade students degrading vastly over the past 30 years from sabotage that global history in public schools has diminished as well, leaving our first world next generation even more lost on this planet. I believe to keep an educated society public school teachings need to increase global history as well as implement legal studies a few hours a week from first grade through 12th grade in all public schools. Obviously the younger students will have legal studies simplified for their age groups, however by the time our new citizens become high school graduates most common law, basic business law, and criminal law should be understood thoroughly as well as practices, principles and processes of various style courts in the USA and EU. Currently we are raising a very dumbed down society in which to gain these basics of education and society one needs to pay heavy fees for education in. Paying heavy fees for basic education such as the before mentioned only strengthens the caste system , monarchies, aristocracies and imperialist states.

Meditation: how many of these people from underdeveloped countries fight their way into US and EU politics and government employment and then revert back to their own thinking, which is what made their home countries they fled the disasters they are and have been? Have I been exposed so greatly to poverty and discord through my life that I believe the USA is a first world country? Where are the 500 years of profits from the USA gone to if our treasuries are completely empty of non existent? Am I this fucking stupid to rest the future of the free world on Donald Trump the used car salesman and his mail order wife? Has my country become such a sociopathic caveman joke that this bloated jerk off is our last bastion of hope for freedom?
